Law University

Coimbra's Unesco-listed university, one of the world's oldest, was originally founded in Lisbon in 1290. It was subsequently relocated several times before being permanently established in Coimbra in 1537. Its showpiece centre is the Pátio das Escolas, a vast courtyard surrounded by majestic 16th- to 18th century buildings. These include the Paço das Escolas, Torre da Universidade, Prisão Acadêmica, Capela de São Miguel and Biblioteca Joanina.

Sé Nova

The landmark 'new' cathedral, started by the Jesuits in 1598 and completed a century later, dominates the square of the same name high in the old town. Its two-tier white facade gives onto a cavernous interior adorned with gilt side panels and an ornate baroque altarpiece. It also features a gallery of reliquaries featuring bones and worse from minor saints and bishops, including St Francis Xavier and St Luke (so it's claimed!). Climb to the platform for uplifting city views.

Location: Largo da Sé Nova, Coimbra

Sé Velha

Coimbra's 12th century cathedral is one of Portugal's finest examples of Romanesque architecture. The main portal and facade are particularly striking, especially on warm summer evenings when the golden stone seems to glow in the soft light. Its construction was financed by Portugal's first king, Afonso Henriques, and completed in 1184 at a time when the nation was still threatened by the Moors, hence its crenellated exterior and narrow, slit-like lower windows. Interior highlights include an ornate late-Gothic retable and a lovely 13th century cloister. Inside, the high, barrelvaulted nave retains its main Romanesque features; side altars and well-preserved Gothic tombs of bishops are backed by bright Andalusian tiles. Over the main altar, the flamboyant gilt retable depicts the Assumption of Mary. Contrast this with the grey tones of the Renaissance Capela do Santíssimo Sacramento alongside.

Location: Largo Sé Velha, Coimbra.

Igreja de Santa Cruz

Praça 8 de Maio, this is one of Coimbra's oldest churches, dating to the 12th century. Little remains of the original Romanesque structure, and it owes much of its current look to a 16th century makeover. Step through the Renaissance porch and flamboyant 18th century arch to the echoing tiled interior where you'll find the elaborate tombs of Portugal's first kings, Afonso Henriques and Sancho I. Also impressive is its restrained Manueline cloister.

Location: Praça 8 de Maio, Coimbra.

Hours: Monday to Saturday 9h30am to 4h30pm. On Sunday and religious holiday 1pm to 5pm.
Price: child free | adult 3€

Convento de Santa Clara-a-Nova

On the west side of the river, this imposing convent was built in the 17th century to replace the original Convento de Santa Clara-a-Velha, which often suffered flooding. It's devoted almost entirely to Queen Isabel (Coimbra's patron saint), whose remains are encased in a silver casket above the altar. Paintings along the aisles illustrate her life story. Also of note is the convent's attractive 18th century cloister.

Location: Calçada de Santa Isabel, Alto de Santa Clara, Coimbra.

Convento de Santa Clara-a-Velha

This Gothic convent was founded in 1330 by the saintly Queen Isabel, Dom Dinis' wife; it served as her final resting place until flooding forced her to be moved uphill. The adjacent museum displays archaeological finds and shows two films, one about the nuns who lived here, the other documenting the 20-year renovation that cleared the river ooze that had buried it since the 17th century.

Location: Calçada de Santa Isabel, Alto de Santa Clara, Coimbra.

Price: 5€ (individual) | 3€ (group - more than 10 people)

Igreja e Museu da Misericórdia

After the extinction of religious orders in Portugal. The building became property of Santa Casa da Misericórdia de Coimbra. Here still exists the church, the archive and the Misericórdia museum, which houses several works of art. In 1841 the institution moved its orphans here, so the space became known as the "Colégio dos Órfãos". At the end of the 20th century, the University of Coimbra leased part of the building in order to install the Faculty of Psychology and Educational Sciences.

Museu Nacional Machado de Castro

This great museum is a highlight of central Portugal. Housed in a 12th century bishop's palace, it stands over the city's ancient Roman forum, remains of which can be seen in the maze of spooky tunnels under the building the cryptoportico. Once you emerge from this, you can start on the fascinating art collection, which runs the gamut from Gothic religious sculpture to 16th century Flemish painting and ornately crafted furniture. Particularly spectacular is the vast recreation of a chapel from the Convento de São Domingos, but highlights abound. These include a section of the delicate cloister of São João de Almedina and some exquisite alabaster pieces from England. Sculptural works trace the development of Portuguese sculpture from the 11th century, showing how the arrival of Renaissance masters from across Europe paved the way for a distinctive Coimbra tradition. You can admire terracotta figures from a 16th century Last Supper by the mysterious French artist Hodart and some stunning panels by the Flemish painter Quentin Metsys. A collection of gold monstrances, furniture and Moorish-influenced pieces is almost too much by the time you reach it.

Jardim Botânico

A serene place to catch your breath, the lovely universityrun botanic garden sits in the shadow of the 16th century Aqueduto de São Sebastião. Founded by the Marquês de Pombal, the garden combines formal flower beds, meandering paths and elegant fountains.
